Americanization Acculturation And Ethnic Identity
A movement for "Americanization" swept the nation during and after World War I, fueled by wartime hysteria over "foreign" ways. Eileen Tamura examines the forms that hysteria took in Hawaii, where the Nisei (children of Japanese immigrants) were targets of widespread discrimination. Tamura analyzes Hawaii's organized effort to force the Nisei to adopt "American" ways, discussing it within the ...

Since there are few studies which address the relationships between racial/ethnic identity and acculturation in the African-American community, the purpose of this study was threefold: 1) explore the relationship between racial identity and African-American acculturation; 2) examine racial and ethnic identity associations; and 3) observe the connections between these cultural constructs and ...

The Relationship Between Racial Identity, Ethnic Identity ...
The relationship between race, ethnicity and identity is a complex subject. Ethnicity means that an individual belongs to a specific culture, social groups, or nation. Although race is defined by physical, biological attributes, it is also strongly tied to cultural and behavioral attributes as well. Belonging to a specific culture tends to ...

Dr. Smith is a sociologist who studies Latin American culture and ethnic assimilation in the United States. He is particularly interested in the role of ongoing residential segregation as a manifestation of internal colonialism in the United States.
Conclusions. This study raises questions about the nature of the “dietary acculturation paradox”. While food – the eating of Mexican foods – is central to the maintenance of ethnic identity throughout acculturation, negative perceptions about the healthfulness of Mexican foods introduce tension into Mexican-American women’s self-identification.
