These divers carry a smaller cylinder of "deco gas" to switch to, usually around the 20-foot stop, or they use one provided by the dive boat. Method #2: Plan the dive and the decompression as it occurs. This is done with dive computers and allows a much greater window of flexibility to the dive plan since no rigid profile is set in advance.

Dive Tables. Before the invention of the Self Contained Underwater Breathing Apparatus the only divers were surface supplied, or hard hat divers. These divers preformed tasks at set depths, meaning they spent their entire dive at one depth. All of their decompression status, and any decompression stop execution, were preformed by diver tenders.
