G. L. S. Shackle (1972), Epistemics & Economics: A Critique of Economic Doctrines" Cambridge University Press; Reprint 1992 A discipline, a region of the world of thought, should seek to know itself. Like an individual human being, it has received from its origins a stamp of character, a native mode of response to the situations confronting it.

G. L. S. Shackle - Wikiquote

There is no better critique of the modern Neoclassical orthodoxy than his Epistemics and Economics and few worse analyses of Keynes than his essay "Keynes and the Nature of Human Affairs". We do not have a unified coherent body of thought but rather scattered insights, flashes of brilliance, moments of confusion. Volume 2, Number 2 (1978)

Koppl (2006, 2009) also identifies as consistent with both Austrian economics and complexity, "BRICE," that is, bounded rationality, rule following, institutionalism, and evolution, a list I shall discuss further below. I shall make two broad arguments regarding Koppl's thesis. On the one hand he ignores the substantial vein of Austrian ...
