chair and a collection of electrons by reducing the former to the latter. But this, Putnam argues, leaves the chair in an inferior ontological status--that of a mere mental projection--which it does not deserve.

Phil 101: Putnam's Internal Realism

Following the middle way which Putnam tries to reach between "reactionary metaphysics" and "irresponsible relativism," the first part of the paper deals with what is the positive insight of traditional realism, i.e., the reality of external things as independent from our mind, as it is emphasized by Putnam.
