House arrest for crimes in Canada began in 1996 as the Canadian government feared that continued use of prison sentences would strain the corrections system. The Canadian system uses house arrest only in lieu of jail terms of two years or less. Canada's Criminal Code justifies the use of house arrest by saying that "an offender should not be deprived of liberty, if less restrictive sanctions ...

Rules on House Arrest in Canada | Legal Beagle

House arrest sits somewhere in the middle on the scale of sentencing - it's more lenient than a prison sentence but harsher than a fine or probation. A judge might consider a sentence of house arrest when jail time would be appropriate but the prisoner is deemed to be too sick or vulnerable to survive the prison environment.
