IQ is not a constant that forever stays the same either- so I wouldn't worry about it too much. Your brain is likely to go through many changes in your lifetime and your IQ will fluctuate. And finally, IQ tests seem to be a poor predictor of creativity which may be much more important than the mental gymnastics IQ tests generally measure.

The scale uses 100 as as dead center, but average is considered to be between 89 and 111 in which 50% of people fall. That means that 25% of population is below "average" and 25% is above. Remember when looking at your score that IQ tests are fallible. One test is not enough to gauge a person's actual intelligence quotient.

I got a lower IQ on a test for a teenager than a test for an adult. I think that many factors can affect the answer you get like how you are feeling on the day and the distractions that are around you when you take the test itself. I really don't know if a higher IQ is going to mean you are going to be more competent/successful in life.
