The Yashica Samurai 3X brings back memories because I bought one in my teenage years and still have it (in case someone wants to buy it) with the original box and manual ! What was attractive to me was the weird design (beauty in the eyes of the beholder as they say), the quality of the lens, the simple programming choices, and best of all the 1/2 frame film design.

The Kyocera/Samurai X3.0 is a very interesting camera with a unique upright camcorder design which could be operated single handed. It was a half frame 35mm SLR with a vertically traveling film compartment, which meant the default orientation of the viewfinder was in landscape, rather than portrait model like in most other half frame 35mm cameras.
