Dr. Alex Shigo (May 8, 1930-October 6, 2006) was a university-trained tree pathologist who was widely considered the "father of modern arboriculture." Dr. Shigo's study of tree biology led to a broadened understanding of the compartmentalization of decay in trees.

Dr. Alex Shigo Biography - Arboriculture

Old arboriculture was based on three treatments: Cutting branches flush to the stem, painting wounds and filling cavities. These treatments are now considered to be harmful for trees, thus it is time to start using new treatments which involve a new modern arboriculture. According to Shigo, this modern arboriculture should mean: 1).
