One of the most dangerous and feared is the "shank" or "shiv," typically defined as any homemade prison knife. This March 5, 2015 photo provided by the New York City Department of Correction shows homemade weapons confiscated from Rikers Island jails in New York during sweeps on March 3 and March 4.

How a correctional officer can defend against knife attacks

Most fixed blade knives are fashioned with a straight-edge adding to the knife's versatility but a serrated edge, whether it runs the full length of the knife or just along a section of the upper blade, can be quite useful for sawing thru bone or wood. A traditional drop-point blade (where the spine slopes to the tip along a convex curve) is ...
