It is popular these days to condemn the Crusades as aggression against the Muslims. It is also false: The Crusades were a response to the aggression of the Muslims -- the Moors -- against western Europe. Belloc does a superb job of presenting the details of the campaigns, and why some things worked, and others did not.

There is so much debate concerning the Middle East and the land of Israel. The debate has raged for centuries, but the greatest myth perpetuated as truth is the idea that the Crusades were done in greed, by the Catholic Church, seeking to colonize the land and convert the Muslims.

The Crusades Debate — Calvary Chapel Golden Springs ...

Contrary to current myths, the Crusades were not a simple bloody campaign by Christian knights against the peaceful Muslims of the Middle East. The truth is always more complex than the one-sentence explanation. Rather, the Crusades were an attempt to stop the marauding attacks on unarmed pilgrims making religious visits to the Holy Land.

As per the original question, the Crusades were horrible, an act of genocide impossible to defend. When the Christians took Jerusalem, the blood of the Muslims, Jews and Eastern Christians went as high as their ankles. It truly was a bloody atrocity, and trying to frame it any other way is intellectually dishonest.
