This is the first book in a new series – The Survivors’ Club – by Mary Balogh. The ‘survivors’ are six men and one woman who were all in one way or another affected by the recent Napoleonic Wars. All six recuperated after the wars at Penderris Hall in Cornwall, where they healed their physical or emotional wounds.

They were a group of survivors of the Napoleonic Wars, five of them former military officers who had been incapacitated by various wounds and sent home to England to recuperate. All of them had come to the attention of the Duke of Stanbrook, who had borne them off to Penderris Hall for treatment, rest, and convalescence.
