How it Works: Although many individuals have a revocable trust as part of their estate plan, these same individuals frequently own assets outright at the time of their death. While this may be intentional, more often than not it is because the grantor, like your father, simply never completed the necessary paperwork.

Can an Irrevocable Trust Protect Your Assets From Medicaid?

Not quite. A will can contain wording to create a testamentary trust to save estate taxes, care for minors, etc. But, because it's part of your will, this trust
