Nina Revoyr - Wikipedia

Revoyr's fourth novel (Southland, 2008, etc.) is a coming-of-age saga in which racism cuts across loyalties between family and friends. It's the early 1970s, and post-Vietnam social turmoil is unabated. Not yet 10, Michelle LeBeau is left with her paternal grandparents in the blue-collar town of Deerhorn, Wis. Michelle's mother, a native of Japan, had abandoned her husband and daughter several ...

Wingshooters by Nina Revoyr, Paperback | Barnes & Noble®

I've read Revoyr's other books, and admired how well she captures the soul and history of neighborhoods and times in LA history that non LA citizens often don't know about. Reading Wingshooters I was impressed that Revoyr is equally graceful at capturing the problems and pleasures of living somewhere small and familiar.

Amazon.com: Customer reviews: Wingshooters

My first introduction to Nina Revoyr's writing was through her 2003 novel, Southland, a story of love, family, and hopes interrupted by forces of hysteria and racial hatred. Told from multiple perspectives during 1994, WWII, and the Watts Riots, Southland shows readers a Los Angeles of shifting borders and poignant history.
